UK borders and migration policy

The Home Office updated various policies to reflect changes under the Nationality and Borders Act, including a policy paper covering the new temporary protection status for persons arriving through irregular routes and so could be deemed 'inadmissible'. You can read an analysis of the policy paper here. (Sources: Home Office, Free Movement)

Plans to re-open a former immigration detention centre in Oxfordshire have been met with criticism. The centre is now likely to be used for asylum seekers marked for removal to Rwanda. A Home Office factsheet on the detention site confirms it will accommodate up to 400 male asylum seekers. (Sources: Oxford Mail, Home Office)

Regarding small boat crossings:

- The numbers of arrivals continues to be high, with the latest year to date figure at over 12,000 people
- Life sentences for pilots of small boats have now come into force
- Those arriving on small boats are to be electronically tagged under new plans.

Specific migrant groups

Sponsors on the Homes for Ukraine scheme could be asked to extend their pledge to offer accommodation to their guests beyond six months. At the same time, there are concerns that lack of safeguarding checks will lead to local authorities being unaware of the whereabouts of Ukrainian children and teenagers who have arrived in the UK via the family visa scheme. (Sources: LGC Plus, Mirror)

The ‘Windrush 75 Network’ held a webinar to discuss why Windrush matters today and the importance of recognising that the Windrush generation and their descendants are ‘part of the fabric of British society’. Relatedly, in response to an article by Lenny Henry this letter explores the difference between ‘integration’ and ‘assimilation’ and why Windrush parents might have urged their children to ‘fit in’ rather than celebrate their identity in the racial context of Britain at the time. (Sources: British Future, the Guardian)

A government update for those with an EU Settlement Scheme \(EUSS\) status on travelling to and from the UK has been published. (Source: Home Office)

Panorama provided an insight into the political situation in Hong Kong and the reasons for the British National Overseas (BNO) visa route in a 30 minute documentary, whilst this article explores how Hongkongers are getting on once here in the UK. (Sources: BBC, Ejinsight)

Chancellors have warned UK universities may prioritise attracting international and postgraduate students whose fees are not capped by the government rather than those paying home fees, due to rising inflation and over a decade of capped tuition fees.
